

Our books highlight the histories and cultures of the various countries our missionaries have lived. They teach that mission work is not always Americans going out into the world. In many cases, God brings people who have lived through challenging experiences to the United States where they indeed become missionaries.

TRUE STORIES

These exciting, real life accounts of danger, struggle and redemption make the gospel come alive for teens and tweens and open their minds to tragedies and suffering happening in countries they know little about. The books portray the faith journeys of missionaries and their immigration to the United States, which was not always easy. These books are sure to generate meaningful discussions and are ideal for middle and high school students in Christian schools, confirmation classes, Christian youth groups and homeschoolers.

The Despicable Missionary and The Bulletproof Missionary are the two books highlighted in this program. These are true stories of people who chose to trust and follow God despite enduring horrible circumstances.

About our books

In The Despicable Missionary, students will be able to relate to Victoria as she struggles to move from having a faith that was instilled in her mind because she was raised in the church to having a faith ingrained in her heart even in the face of persecution.

The Bulletproof Missionary shows students that God works in our lives in many ways that don't make sense until we can look back and see the connections. He provides a way for us, even in the face of heartbreaking situations. Shang Ik should not have survived, let alone have become a respected college professor as an adult. God's path for him was a miraculous one.
